KnowledgeBlue and Iodynamics to merge

KnowledgeBlue acquires Iodynamics, a Linux infrastructure management and open source consulting company.

SALT LAKE CITY, UT– September 6, 2007 – Utah Open Source Conference.

KnowledgeBlue and Iodynamics announce their agreement to merge operations as of September 6, 2007. Adding Iodynamics “under the hood” technical strengths to the existing KnowledgeBlue solution delivery creates a more complete development and delivery team.

“We are very excited to add such a strong system management and administration component to our solutions,” said Robert Kunz, President of KnowledgeBlue. “KnowledgeBlue has focused on the top end of the open source stack, but as our operations and projects have grown, we discovered a need for greater expertise in the lower layers. Iodynamics fills that need.”

“Iodynamics has always been committed to the application and promotion of open source solutions,” according to Doran Barton, President of Iodynamics. “By joining forces with KnowledgeBlue, we can strengthen their solutions through better managed service delivery and a deeper understanding of the entire open source stack.” Iodynamics will continue to service its existing client base with managed server and collocation services.
